Four years ago, a fragment from an ancient document was accidentally discovered at a minor excavation of the Danciger Campus Football Field. This fragment, written in an antiquated Anglican dialect, referred to the story of a small town called Danciger, a priceless commodity called the Ineffable Wisdom, and a quest undertaken by three brave knights from the school of the Good Count Groffius, Procurator of Danciger.

Over the past four years, numerous attempts were made to excavate more fragments that would reveal to the world just how these three items were related. Finally, in June of this year, the fragments were found, largely intact, and the amazing story was pieced together: the story which has come to be known as:

THE QUEST

And it came to pass that the road to the Ineffable Wisdom had been lost by the gentle people of Danciger. Yearning for the security and confidence that such wisdom brings, the people of Danciger selected three young knights to seek out the Great Belquinor, Scion of Avihsey, for it was said that he alone held the secret to the Ineffable Wisdom. The three knights were Piouse, Zealos, and Indifferaunce.

Piouse was a studious, bookwormish sort, who although hardly warlike, was always able to defend himself when attacked. Yet, he always preferred the cloister to the battlefield. Having had religious instruction all his life, he was the most learned of the three, but also the most cautious.

Zealos, having discovered religion relatively late in life, made up for it by his defense of the religion against all who would scoff or degrade it. He knew less of religious lore than did Piouse, and was not so experienced a warrior as the third knight, Indifferaunce. Yet, his fervor and emotional approach more than made up for these deficiencies.

Like Piouse, Indifferaunce had had religious instruction all his life, but had developed a different attitude toward it. He realized that religion alone was not enough, and had, in the past, been disillusioned by what he felt were expressions of hypocrisy among those whom he had considered devout. This experience had given Indifferaunce a cynical approach to life. Often he mocked Zealos' enthusiastic approach to religion, or Piouse's caution and exactness, but deep inside, he felt a strong tie to them.

Needing supplies and armour for their quest, the three bold knights turned their steps toward the Royal Armoury, a small, dingy hut, with a large signboard proclaiming in gold letters:

YE ROYALL ARMOURIE
Discounts Large & Prices Smalle
To Ye Armourie Come Ye All

"Verily," mused Piouse, "An had the Armourer lavished half the money he burgeoned on this sign, the Armoury would be full twice the present size, and a far more pleasant place than it be now."

A small missive tacked to the door said:

Back in Quarter of an Hour

"It will serve us to wait," said Zealos. "Verily, ye Armourer has betaken himself to procure fine stuffs to clothe and protect the knights withall." Indifferaunce grumbled.

It was a full hour before the Armourer, a small man of massive girth, returned, wiping his lips with a napkin.

"Gentlemen, what can I do for you?" asked the Armourer briskly. Zealos saluted him and proclaimed in a sentorian voice:

"Most worthy Armourer! We come before you embarked upon a most awesome and holy mission and are in need full sore of the noble tools of weaponry, as befit three stout knights errant."

"You want the full get-up?" asked the Armourer. "Then come right in."

He unlocked the door and ushered in the trio. Once inside, the knights saw shelves stacked with tarnished armour covered with yellow "USED" strips, and shiny new armour, gleaming silver in the dim light. When Indifferaunce touched them, the silvery paint came off on his hands.

"Don't touch the stuff, my friend," said the Armourer, "I'll be with you in a minute."

After an hour had passed, each knight held a full suit of armour. Yet, nothing matched. It was all a strange combination of used and new equipment. The knights looked at each other shyly, feeling like fools.

"Now," exclaimed the Armourer, "We can talk price. You, my friend (pointing to Piouse) owe me ten crowns, four shillings, and sixpence."

"So much?" implored Piouse. "But for that price I could procure a new set of armour. I came to you because it is said you give discounts."

"My friend," said the Armourer, "I charge the same prices as anyone else."

"But why do you add percentages? Why sixpence extra?" asked Zealos.

"That's royal tax, queen's tax, and quest tax.".

"Then you also charge tax!" cried Zealos.

"I do not charge tax," said the Armourer, patiently. "I collect it. Do you want the armour or don't you?"

"It's so expensive," murmured Piouse.

"Enough!" shouted the Armourer. "Take it off and get out."

The three dejected heroes complied and left the Armoury. Slowly, they walked into the forest in the direction of Fortress Avihsey.

"Now we're in a fix," moaned Indifferaunce. "For without armour and weapons, how can we protect ourselves?"

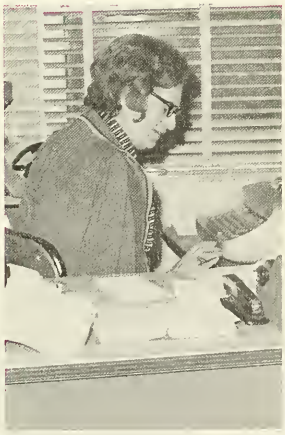
"We certainly need help," agreed Piouse.

"Ahem!" said a voice behind them. They turned, and saw a man of pale complexion, dressed in a neat suit and vest, with a pointed beard, puffing on a cigar.

"Who are you?" asked Zealos.

"I am called Revelin," whispered the man. "I stand alongside the road to Avihsey, and try to help those who pass. Long ago, I was as mighty as King Belquinor. Those were the days when the turrets of Avihsey shone golden instead of dull green. It was a smaller fortress then, but, I believe, a happier one. You say you need armour. Well, then: Abracadabra, tora-u-mada!" There was a puff of smoke and the heroes found themselves fully outfitted in armour. Before they could thank him, the old magician had vanished.

"Truly, a great magician and benefactor, that Revelin!" cried Zealos. Piouse agreed. Indifferaunce said nothing, but fingered the pommel of his sword thoughtfully. The three set off toward Avihsey.



The road grew twisted and more circuitous. As the three knights came to a cave planted in the middle of the road, there came to their ears sounds like the gnashing of teeth, roaring, ripping paper, and the smell of pipe tobacco. Piouse mumbled a psalm.

Lowering his visor and making his voice deeper than it really was, Zealos advanced to the mouth of the cave and shouted, "Peace! What maketh that hellish uproar?"

There was a groan: "Closed out — all courses closed!"

"I challenge thee, be thou beast or fiend," spake Zealos. "If thou canst do no more than sit in this cave and emit such foul noises, thou hast no right to live. Come forth, monster! 'Tis the pure knight, Zealos, who challenges thee!"

Just then a hollow belch echoed through the cave and a huge red blob rolled out — the knights leapt aside, and ran for the trees. The ball smoked and throbbed, and small strips of scarlet tape waved on its surface. It rolled wildly around the clearing, snarling in grass and bushes and ripping bark and leaves off trees. Finally, it stopped in the middle of the clearing. It lay there and pulsated.

Zealos stepped forth from behind his cover of trees, unsheathing his sword.

"Hellish demon ball," spake Zealos, "from what Satan's spawn wert thou sprung?"

The ball only pulsated.

"Speak, scarlet sphere!"

Still no retort. Zealos held his sword over his head.

"Perish thee!"

He sank the sword in up to the hilt. The ball wheezed, belched a small puff of red smoke, and then seemed to harden. The scarlet tentacles reached out, felt Zealos delicately, and wound around his limbs.

"O, help me, friends," cried Zealos, "for it will not let me go!"

Piouse and Indifferaunce ran forward, just as two more belches sounded within the cave. Indifferaunce was caught instantly, but the smaller Piouse leapt nimbly into a tree and hid. Zealos, trying to pull out his sword, had somehow gummed up his arm with tape and was unable to move. Indifferaunce's foot stuck to the ball, and he was pulled to the ground. As Piouse watched, a huge dragon emerged from the cave and leered at the two captives.

"Now, young knights," snorted the dragon, "I have you in my clutches. Where are your pink slips?"

"Alas, foul dragon," answered Zealos. "We have none. Unhold us from your hellish balls of red tape, and let us continue on our quest!"

The dragon only laughed.

"You are fools," it said, "for daring to come this way without proper authorization. Without a pink slip signed by Bakonio, regent of Avihsey, and countersigned by the Fair Epstilene, you cannot hope but stay here, wrapped in my quagmire of red tape. I am the Registragon, placed here to guard against intrusions by whelps such as yourselves. What do you seek?"

"Our mission, O most horrible Registragon," said Indifferaunce, "is to learn the wisdom of Avihsey."

"You should have planned your mission more carefully," said the Registragon. "None but utter fools would have come so far without paying more attention to prerequisites, corequisites, financial clearance, and most important of all; the Pink Slip. Now, you will remain here forever!"

Slipping quietly down the tree, Piouse ran off into the forest in search of someone who would help him save his friends.

Turning around a large oak tree, he saw a tollbooth. Wondering what that sort of thing was doing in the middle of a forest, Piouse advanced to the door and knocked. The door opened with a creak.

Piouse saw before him a little man, all round and roly-poly, who squinted at the young hero in the sunlight.

"Yes?" asked the man.

"Please, good Tollkeeper," said Piouse, "I wonder if you could help me. You see, my friends are being held captive by the Registragon. We were on our way to Fortress Avihsey, and this Registragon keeps asking for financial clearance and pink slips . . . "

"Young friend," said the Tollkeeper, "you have come to the right place. As for financial clearance, I can help you as no one else in the forest can. My name is Socolgrede, and I collect the tolls from all who would reach the Fortress."

"How much is the toll, good sir?" asked Piouse.

"How much you got?" demanded Socolgrede. Checking his purse, Piouse answered, "Just two shillings."

"Hardly enough," sniffed Socolgrede, "but you can make up the rest in work-study, and you may qualify for a scholarship. Hand it over!" He took the money and disappeared into the house, then emerged, carrying in his arms stacks of pink, green, and yellow slips, and a small vial.

"Fill out your name and address on each one of these," he said, "and fling them into the eyes of the Registragon. It is his duty to sort and collate each one. And while he is doing that, drip this liquid prepared by Bakonio and blessed by Epstilene on the red balls. It is called Waiver Fluid, and will melt away the scarlet tape instantly. Have you any money left, young fellow?"

"No, Socolgrede, not a penny," sighed Piouse.

"Then all is as it should be for a pilgrim to Avihsey. Go in peace!" The Tollkeeper slammed his door shut. Piouse hurried away.

"Meanwhile, the Registragon was asking Indifferaunce and Zealos what they planned to do with their futures.

"Why are you so suddenly interested in our welfare?" asked Indifferaunce.

"No real reason," replied the Registragon chuckling. "I just like to know about people before I eat them."

Suddenly, Piouse ran into the clearing. "Take these, foul Registragon!" he cried, flinging Socolgrede's slips into the monster's face. The Registragon bellowed, then began to separate the slips into piles and alphabetize them. Piouse sprinkled the Waiver Fluid onto the red balls of tape, and they instantly melted away. The three knights ran off into the forest, leaving the Registragon bellowing helplessly, still collating.

After their narrow escape, the three heroes continued into the forest. The sun was setting. "Verily, 'twill soon be dark," said Zealos.

"There must be an inn of some sort nearby," said Indifferaunce.

"Yet we must be careful," advised Piouse, "for in such uncharted wilds as these, there are undoubtedly lawless folk who would do us harm."

The knights began to lose their way. They resolved to enter the first inn to which they came. To their surprise, they happened upon not one small inn, but three mighty buildings in the middle of a forest grotto. Sitting on a rock and enjoying the cool night air was the Innkeeper. They saw that he was a man of extraordinary height.

"Good sir," said Zealos. "Be thou the Innkeeper of these fair and pleasing mansions?"

"Yes," drawled the man, as he slowly turned to look at them. "Hmm, I know your faces. Are you registered for Orientation? Have you picked up linen yet? Here, fill these out."

He thrust at them an armful of complicated-looking forms, and sank into repose. The knights were discomfited at having received such a welcome. Carefully cradling the forms in his helmet, Piouse approached the man once more and said, "Good sir, we are but three young knights who seek the Fortress Avihsey and the monarch Belquinor. We seek lodging for the evening. And now, I pray, do thou arise and show us to good chambers, for we are footsore and weary, having just escaped the cave of the awful Registragon."

The Innkeeper stood up and said, "You know, I am a bit of a psychologist, and can tell from your manner of speech that you have an Oedipus Complex with masochistic overtones. Did you hate your father? Never mind, I'll put you in Reuben's Hall. Here are your keys; touch them."

He held out a great ring of keys. Piouse laid his hand on them and vanished instantly. The Innkeeper turned to Indifferaunce.

"You, my young friend, seem more 'with it' than the other," said he. "I will place you into Morgue Dorm." The process was repeated.

"Lastly, for you, my hero," he said to Zealos. "You will sleep in the cradle of tradition, Rats Hall." Zealos gingerly touched the ring of enchanted keys, and disappeared. What had become of the knights?

Piouse found himself in the broad hall of Reuben's and shivered in the chilling wind that blew down the corridor. He lay his hand on his sword-hilt and called out, "Hello?"

Only the echoes answered.

Piouse pushed open one of the many doors in the hall, this one saying "Library" on it. The room was full of books, sprawling encyclopedias, holy tomes, pamphlets, magazines, none of which seemed to have ever been opened.

Perched on an Encyclopedia Judaica was an owl, who cocked a yellow eye on Piouse and shrilled.

"Rawrrkk! What do you want?"

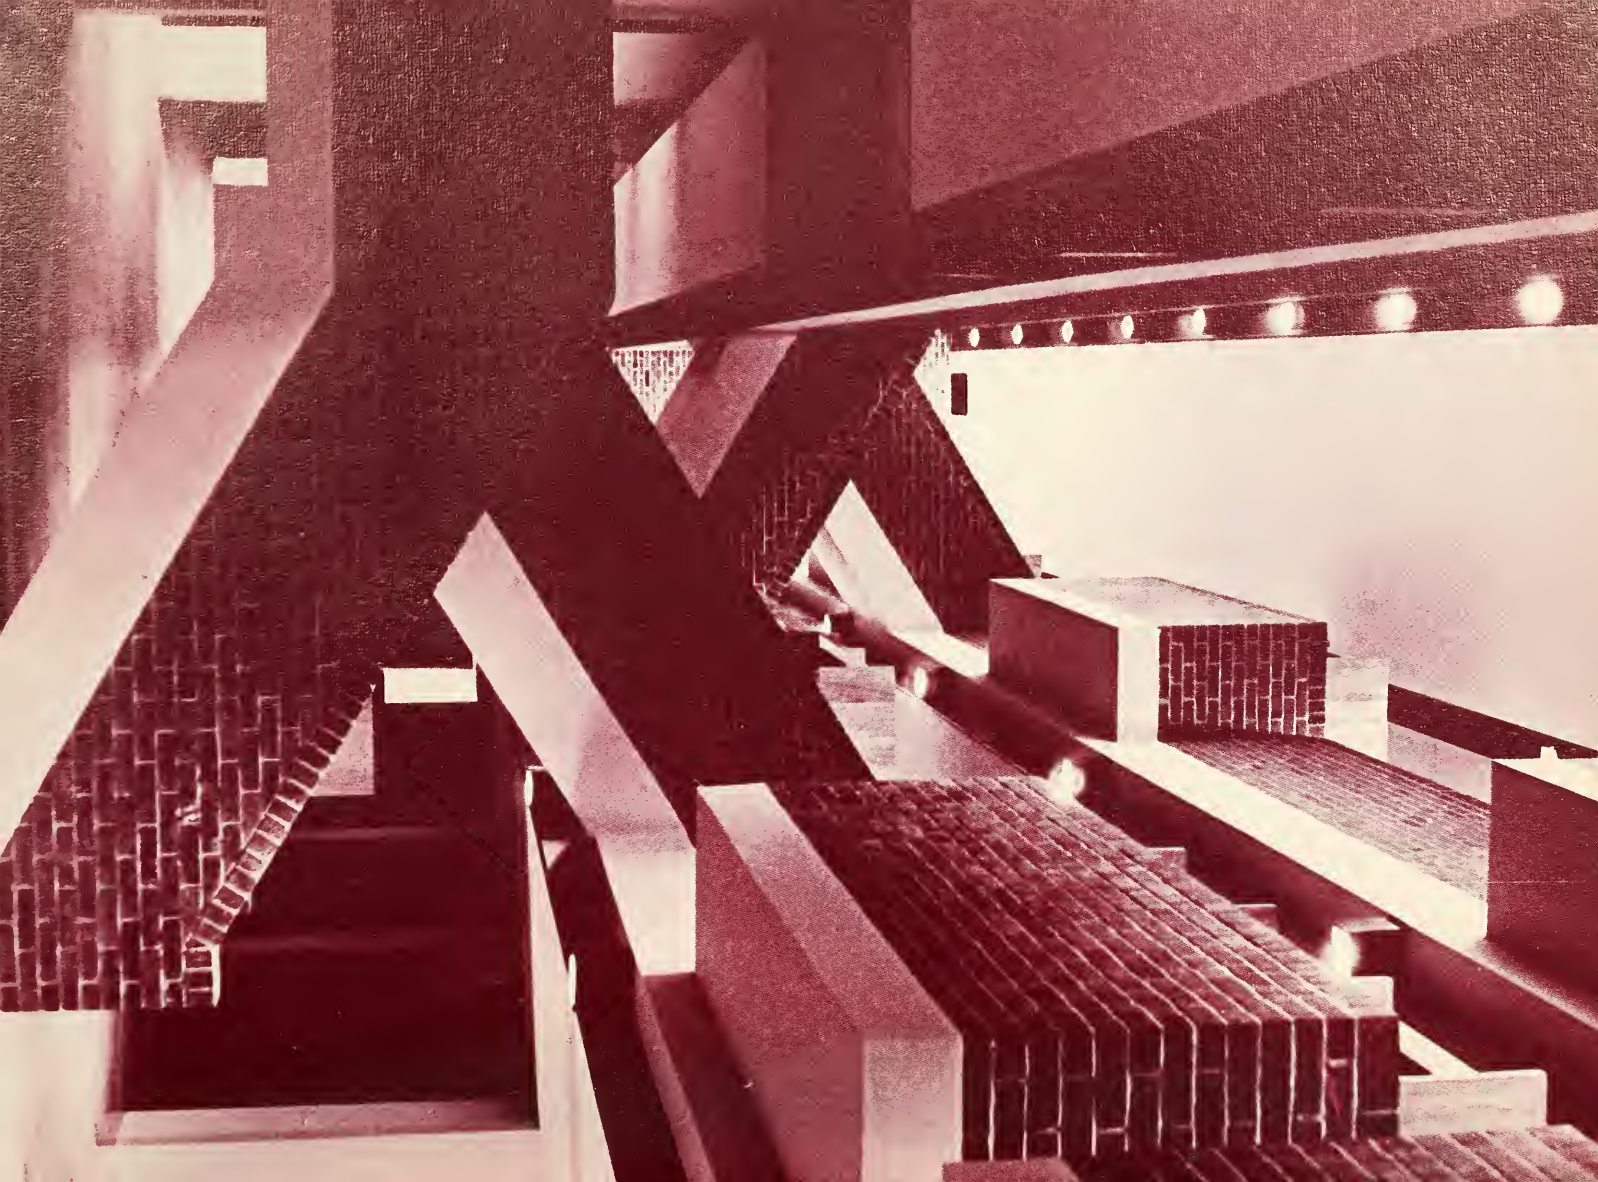
Piouse doffed his helmet and said politely, "An it please thee, Sir Owl, I am Piouse, maiden knight, in search of the awesome . . "

"Are you classified?" rasped the owl. "Is your card punched? What is your social security number?"

"Surely, good Sir Owl," said the bewildered Piouse, "I wot not of what ye want. I'm looking for a place to sleep."

"Rawrrkk!" shrieked the owl. "Down the hall. You're from RIETS and require authorization from Charley-pop. Authorization, classification, administration, humiliation! Begone!" The owl flapped his scrawny wings so powerfully that the dust flew, blowing Piouse out into the hall.



He rubbed the dust out of his eyes and looked down the hall. A door opened, and Piouse heard someone mumbling. In the room, he saw a man wearing a black suit and tie, and a white shirt, shuffling the leaves of a calendar.

"Good Sir," said Piouse, "it is said I require authorization from thee, if thou art Charley-pop. Canst thou supply me with the same?"

The man squinted at him.

"Ah!" he cried. "You look like one of my boys. Welcome to RIETS/YP. But please don't disturb me in the future. I must rearrange the calendar."

Piouse left, closing the door behind him. Shortly, he found another room which contained a bed. Tossing himself upon the bed, Piouse fell into a deep slumber.

Zealos, meanwhile, had reappeared in the hall called Rats, the "cradle of tradition".

"It may be hoped that tradition dwelleth here," thought Zealos. "For most assuredly, naught else could survive."

He pushed open one of the doors, prepared to see a dusty pallet, but found himself instead, in a wide chamber whose rich appearance belied the dingy surroundings. There stood a great desk of polished wood, encrusted with scrolls and cherubim. Sitting at the desk and studying a tractate of Talmud was a man, short of stature, dressed neatly in a plain grey suit. He looked up.

"Your name?" he asked Zealos.

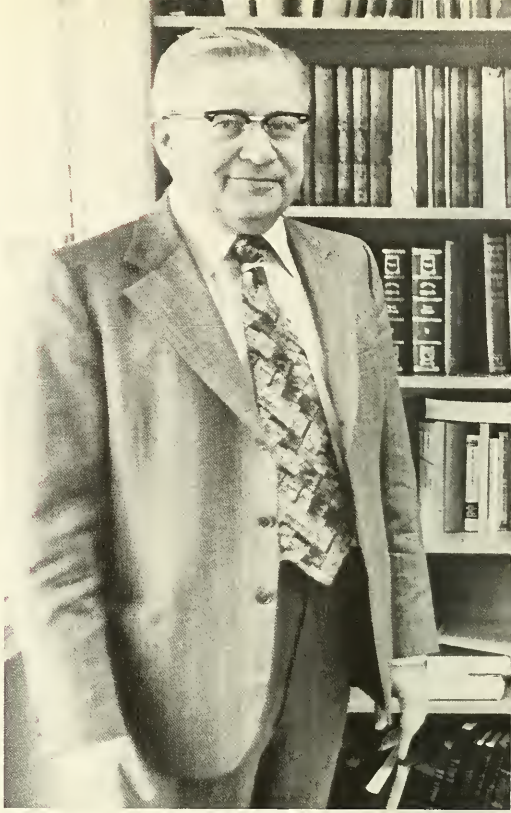
"An it please thee, sir," stammered the usually clear-throated Zealos, "I am called Zealos, late of Province Danciger, in search of Wisdom in Avihsey."

"We shall see," answered the man, "whether you are worthy of admission to Avihsey. If you don't study, you don't belong here. What are your plans?"

"Venerable sir," answered Zealos, "may I ask, what is thy name?"

"I am called Judgement," said the man. "And this section of Avihsey is mine, the House of Judgement. Begin!"

"My quest," said Zealos, "is to bring back the secret of the Wisdom of Avihsey to the inhabitants of Danciger . . . "



But what had become of Indifferaunce? Transported by the Innkeeper into Morgue, he found the hall to be extremely comfortable. He strolled through the hall in a carefree manner, marveling at its design. Pushing open one of the doors, Indifferaunce found a man sitting at a desk. The man took no notice of him, but lit a cigarette, a cigar, and a pipe in quick succession. He was sitting on a pile of ropes, which were constantly winding themselves around his body — yet seemed not to impair his movements. Finally, the man saw Indifferaunce, and said, "Rrmph?"

Indifferaunce entered cautiously, lest the strange man seize him in his tentacles. He was motioned to a seat. The room was growing hazy with tobacco smoke.

"What are your career goals?" asked the man. "Have you fulfilled all your course requirements?"

Caught off guard, Indifferaunce said, "Are there requirements here? Could you help me fulfill them?"

"I would help you, young man," said the smoker, peering through the haze, "but my hands, as you can see, are tied. Give us a good year."

As the smoker went back to his work, Indifferaunce left the room. Soon, he found a room with an empty bed. Exhausted from the day's many perils, he collapsed upon the bed and slept.

The next morning, the three knights emerged from their respective sleeping quarters, feeling well rested. Piouse asked the Innkeeper if he could recommend a place where the knights could dine.

"The Inn of Choparkalex, the Gastronomical Wizard," intoned the Lofty Innkeeper, "is a fine place to eat. I and Mrs. Innkeeper often indulge there." He then proceeded to tell the knights how to reach this den of dumplings. The knights thanked him for his hospitality and proceeded on their way.

The knights soon reached a clearing in the middle of which stood a small building. A signboard attached to the building read:

Ye Eating-Place
(Also Catering Done)

Entering, the knights found the place empty.

"If this place is so good," said Indifferaunce, "there should be more people here."

"Have a seat," said a voice.

Cautiously, the knights sat down; Piouse opened a menu and read, "Student Special, Puree of Dragon Scales, Breaded Toadstools, Choparkalex Surprise."

"The Surprise is highly recommended," said the voice.

"Then let us have Surprises all around," cried Zealos.

"Oh, you will," said the voice.

The bowls of food soon appeared and the knights ate hungrily.

Upon completing the meal, the knights, at first, felt well sated. But soon the food began to take a grisly gastronomical toll. Possessed by a pressing urgency, Indifferaunce rose to make a hasty departure, but alas, sank to the ground coughing uncontrollably. Piouse tried to help his comrade but found that he could hardly move. Zealos began scratching his head madly, for alas, he was sprouting a great mane of hair, a lion's mane! He was turning into a lion, just as Indifferaunce was becoming a donkey, and Piouse a turtle.

"Ha, ha!" laughed the voice. "You are indeed fools to trust my food. I am Choparkalex, and my low prices are but a foil to make you enter my lair! Now you have attained your natural forms. Despite your earnestness, you, Zealos, are naught but a foolhardy, roaring lion. You, Piouse, are so powerless because of your onesided piety, that you are slow as a turtle. And you, Indifferaunce, your cynicism is best cloaked in the guise of a donkey. Go now, fools!"

"Alas, but we're in a fix," brayed Indifferaunce. "How will we ever get to Avihsey like this?"

"Now, friend Indifferaunce," said Piouse. "Have patience."

"For my part," said Zealos, "I am somewhat flattered . . Indeed, methinks that my natural talents somewhat lean toward those of a lion."

"Don't speak foolishly," said Indifferaunce. "Choparkalex intended to make us content to live as animals. We must seek help to break this evil spell . . . The shame of it that I must be made a donkey!"

The three dejected changelings walked on. They soon reached a sunnier part of the forest in which stood a tower, all white and pink. A canopy adorned the area in front of the tower, and upon it were written these words:

Welcome to Brookdale Ye Kingdome of
Les Queens de Trois-Quatres

"Queens of Thirty-Fourth?" moaned Indifferaunce. "Surely, more sorceresses. I hope that they're friendly and can help us!"

The room which the knights entered was all white with one black wall. There, on particolored thrones, sat the queens, Surette, Rivque, and Laeoh. They looked up as the knights entered.

"Gastronomio's work," said Surette. The other two nodded.

"Nay, good lady," growled Zealos, "for the rascal's name was Choparkalex."

"He has many names," said Surette, "but they all mean heartburn . . . You know, you're cute Zealos, even if you are a lion. Where are you from? Is this your first year at Avihsey? What are you studying?"

"I beg thee, fair maiden," moaned Piouse, "not to trouble our heads with these questions; I doubt whether we shall ever be worthy of attaining Avihsey."

"Don't worry about that now," said Surette. "Come here and let me stroke your shell."

Indifferaunce cast his donkey-eyes on Rivque and moved closer. Laeoh smiled at Zealos. Thence passed a most agreeable half-hour, with the knights recounting their adventures to the beautiful queens. Then it came time to part, for the knights hoped to reach the fortress by nightfall. Each queen gave her knight a small vial.

"Drink this," they were told, "and you will be instantly returned to your former states. Good Luck!"

"Most beautiful and gracious maidens," said Zealos, "we thank thee, and hope to see you again!"

"Oh, don't worry — you will," the queens assured them. The knights quaffed their potions and upon returning to their former states, seized their swords and ran into the forest in the direction of Fortress Avihsey.

The gates of Fortress Avihsey were well-guarded, so the knights hid in the bushes and thought of how they could gain entry. They marvelled at the domes — golden once, now a dull green, and carefully studied the Saracen guards of Marmoraunce the Fearless, responsible for the Fortress' security. Within, the knights knew, was the lair of the Regent Bakonio, who administered the rule of Avihsey, assisted by the Fair but Dangerous Epstilene.

The knights decided that it would be foolhardy to try a direct attack upon the Fortress; they had to use trickery. The Queens had told them of Marmoraunce's only known weakness; he was deathly afraid of grass . . . They decided on a plan. From Choparkalex's inn they had stolen some oregano, a spicey substance which bears a striking resemblance to grass. They would stun Marmoraunce by flinging the oregano in his face, and then rout the leaderless Saracens and storm the castle.

When Marmoraunce came out to inspect the guards, Indifferaunce leaped into his path and threw the oregano. The horrified Marmoraunce bellowed and tried to brush the stuff off his black leather armour. As Indifferaunce shoved him into the moat, Piouse and Zealos whacked the Saracens cold with the flat of their swords, tied them up with the straps of their time-clocks, and tossed them into the moat after their leader. The three knights raced over the drawbridge and into the castle.

A sign stood in the main hall:

WAY TO WISDOMME

"'Tis clear," said Zealos, "no man of Avihsey passed here for a long time."

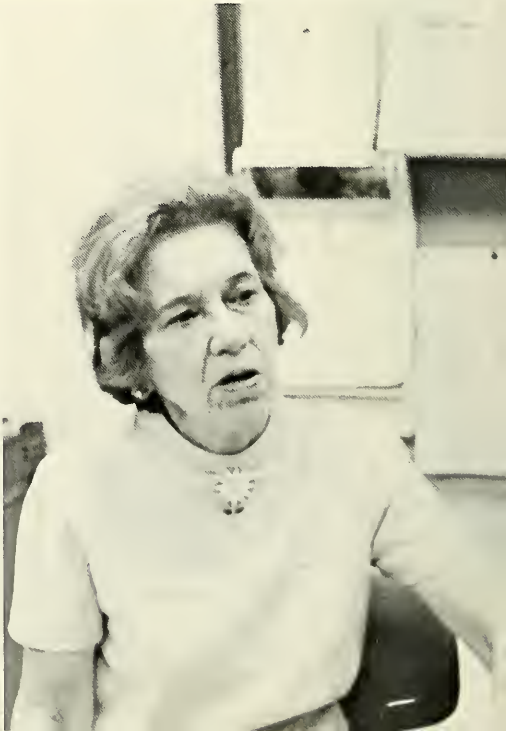
"What splendor!" exclaimed Piouse. "What a majestic place this must have been!"

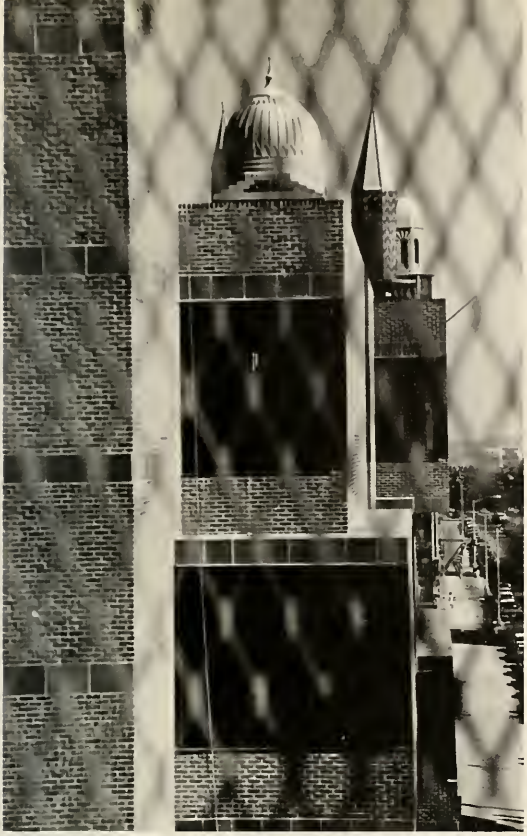
"Come, we must find the great Belquinor and learn the Ineffable Wisdom," said Indifferaunce.

Suddenly, the torches in the hall lit up and a voice rumbled, "I am Bakonio, Regent to the Mighty Belquinor, Scion of Avihsey. Who are you, and why do you seek him?"

"We are three knights errant," spake Zealos humbly. "We have come to speak to the good King Belquinor to gain the Ineffable Wisdom so that we may bring it to all the inhabitants of Danciger."

Suddenly, two doors at the end of the hall opened, and a roaring was heard. It was the Fair Epstilene! She threw forms at them, asked them for proof of financial clearance, told them that the Regent was in conference and could not be disturbed, that they could not be admitted without a pink slip.





When Piouse showed her the slip he had obtained from Socolgrede, Epstilene realized that she was powerless to detain them. Sighing once, she said, "Just a moment. I'll see if the Regent is in."

Epstilene entered an adjoining chamber and finally emerged some ten minutes later. "The Regent will see you now, but first place your swords in the umbrella rack."

Bakonio proved to be rather cooperative. Without too much difficulty, the three knights were able to convince him of their noble purpose. The Regent instructed the knights to dress in their most colorful and stately armour, and then with a few cautioning words which lasted but a mere two hours, directed the knights to the throne room of the Mighty Belquinor.

Three exhausted but happy knights tapped on the door of Belquinor's throne room. They were finally to see the Great Belquinor, Scion of Avihsey, Protector of Danciger! Swinging open the heavy bronze doors, they approached slowly and knelt. Taking out a scroll, Zealos read the request and humble greetings which the knights had drawn up before departing on their great quest.

Strangely, though, Belquinor did not respond. His long white beard and unruly hair did not even twitch. Summoning up his courage, Zealos approached the Great Monarch. He touched the still form of Belquinor, and Belquinor crumbled into dust. A whispering voice said:

"Who seeketh Utter Wisdom, not power-play nor pelf, Let him not seek Belquinor but within himself."

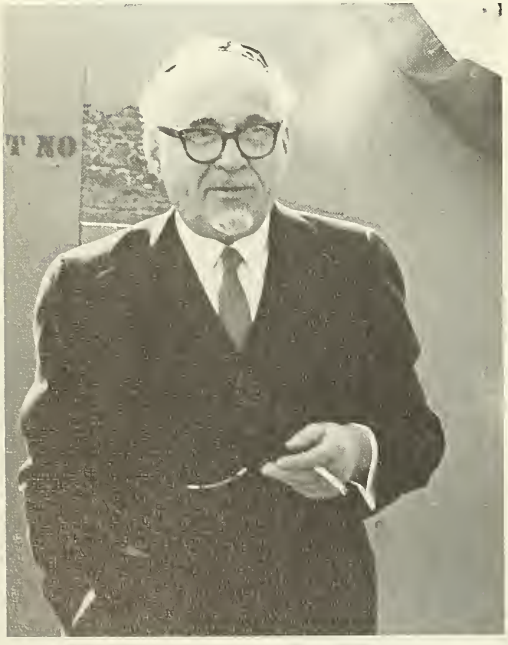
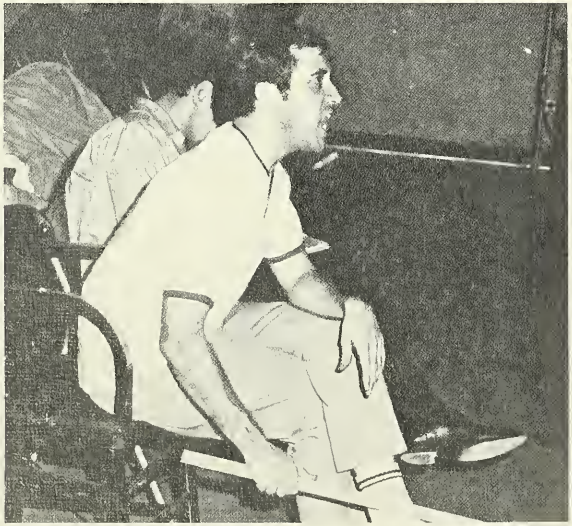
The quest was over.

The three knights returned to Danciger, there to live out the rest of their lives administering the needs of the three religious divisions to which they had been admitted, and taking to wife the three Queens of Trois-Quatres. They lived out their lives fully and happily, and passed away to be gathered unto their seed.

HERE ENDETH THE CHRONICLE





MR. ANTHONY BEUKAS

In his eight years at Yeshiva, Mr. Anthony Beukas has gone far beyond his role as a teacher. Most significantly, he has transformed Dramatics into a source of creative fulfillment for those actually partaking in Dramatics Society productions, and into a source of enjoyable cultural entertainment for those viewing them. In this sense, there are few in the Yeshiva community that have not benefited from Mr. Beukas's selfless devotion to student development and maturity. To the class of 1973, Mr. Beukas has been a teacher, a director, and most important, a friend.

It is with a deep sense of admiration and gratitude that we dedicate Masmid '73 to Mr. Anthony Beukas.

Philip Lieberman
Blessed Memory

The Philip Lieberman Memorial Award is presented annually by the graduating class to the senior it considers highest in character and personality, and who has offered outstanding service to his class. This year, the class of 1973 has selected Brian Frohlinger of Fairfield, Connecticut, as the recipient. A JSS student majoring in Chemistry, Brian has served as President of the JSS Student Council for two years. He has also served as Secretary of the Undergraduate Council, Chairman of the Yom Hashoah program on campus, and Co-chairman of the Student Admissions Society. The class of 1973 is confident that Brian will continue to assert himself as a leader in the American Jewish community.

The production of a yearbook is an enormous undertaking, especially when most of the work must be done by one person. Yet, I feel that credit should be given where due, and so I would like to extend extra-special thanks to:.

Ira Bejell — it was a pleasure working with you.

Arlene Opatut — it could never have been done without you.

Danny Wildman — your dedication and tireless efforts were a source of strength and encouragement.

Josh Miller — your persistence paid off.

A United Project

We announce the formation of the United Project, a concerted effort to revitalize the Yeshiva College Student Council.

Since our arrival at Yeshiva College, we have witnessed a continuous deterioration of student activities. Over the past few years our student community has lost its voice in city-wide and national Jewish affairs.

At our own expense of time and money, we have undertaken to research the ineptitude of the Student Council. In one week we will present our results.

In order to implement our ideas, we will enter a united slate of candidates in the forthcoming student government and class elections. We appeal to you for ideas which will form the first united

SPORTS

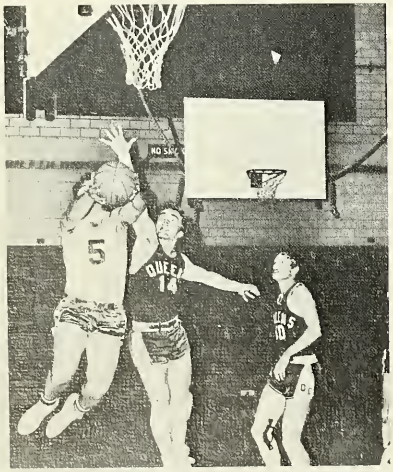
For centuries, sports have been considered one of the most necessary tools used to produce the whole man. To acquire a sense of actual living, the body, as well as the mind, must receive dynamic encouragement and involvement. Athletic skills employ both the stamina and exertion of the body, as well as the energy and concentration of the mind, in order to bring about the proper functioning of the individual.

For students at Yeshiva, the Latin saying, "mens sana in corpora sano," a healthy mind in a healthy body, has acquired particular significance. We have come to understand that we are, after all, Jews living in a secular world. By being part of this secular world, even in such things as athletic competition, we can better assert our uniqueness as the possessors of the rich and vibrant heritage of Judaism. Pride in our uniqueness can only be strengthened by the attainment of equality with others.

Unfortunately, years of administration neglect have severely frustrated attempts by YU jocks to achieve a sence of physical equality with their 'secular' counterparts. To some, this may not be very disturbing. But to those of us who view athletic competition not only as a personal struggle against a worthy opponent, but also as a battle in defense of who we are and what we stand for, it is very disturbing.

The occassional win collected by our Basketball, Fencing, or Wrestling Teams, is just enough to remind us that if we keep trying, we can win; that even when talent, speed, equipment, and practice are lacking, guts may be enough to carry us through. But all to often, even that is not enough.

BASKETBALL



The rag-tag Basketball Team is a perfect example of a team dying of neglect. Year after year, the team has had to contend with ill-fitting uniforms, no home gym to practice or play in, and an impossible schedule against superior opponents. But until this year, there was always at least one 'superstar' who would help the team capture at least a few respectable victories a year. This year, there were no superstars. Still, co-captains Chuck Levner and Joel Rich, along with Dave Wilzig, Albie Faber, Ira Shraga, and big Paul Merlis, accomplished under the leadership of Coach Halpert, what many have considered a "Mission Impossible;" they won 3 games. But they also dropped 15, and that is a hell of a morale crusher; it also does wonders for the team's reputation, and the reputation of the school.

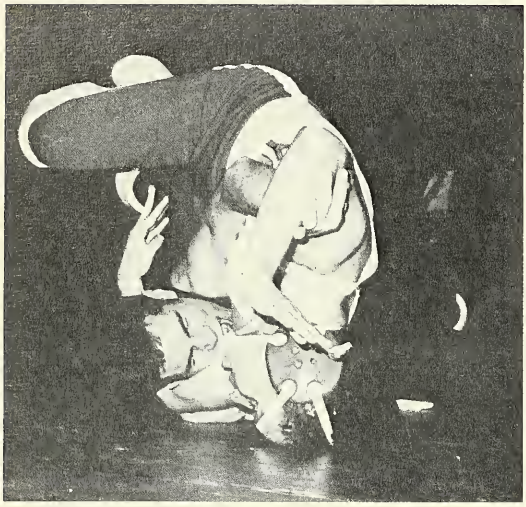
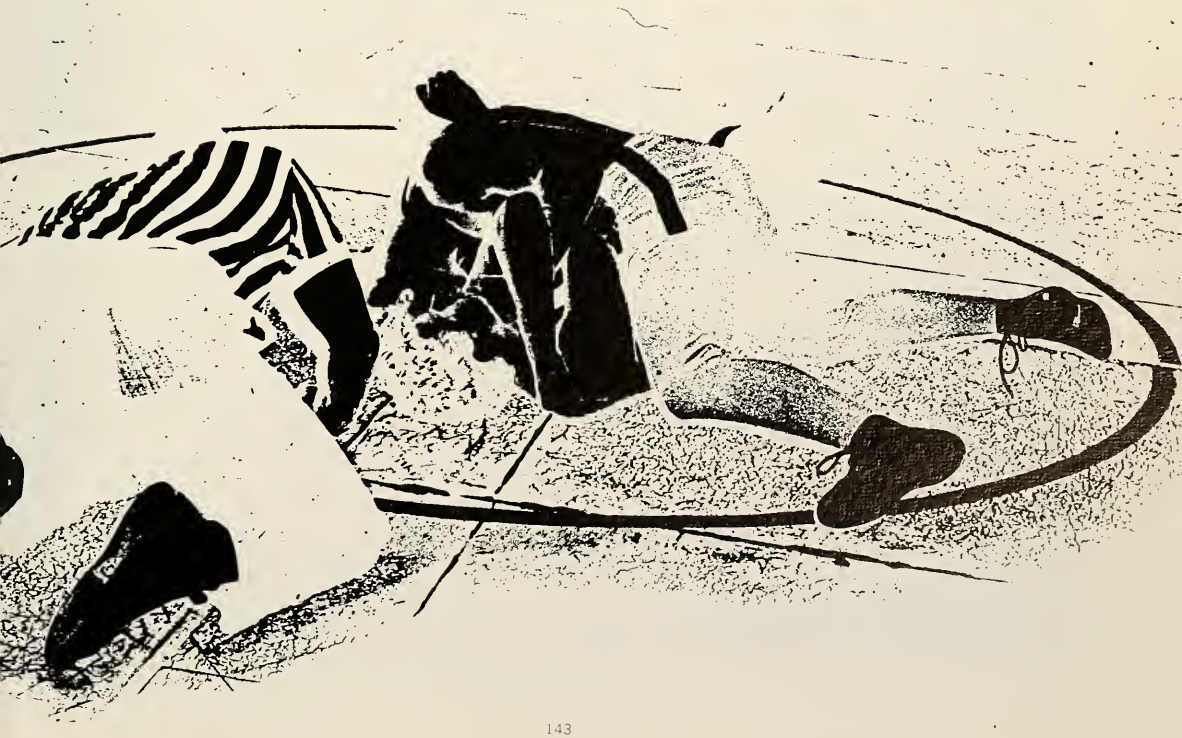
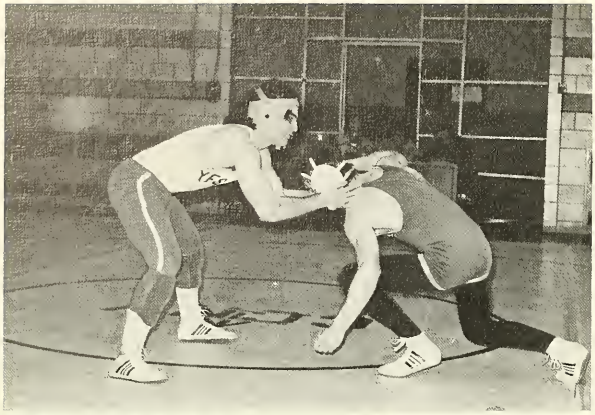
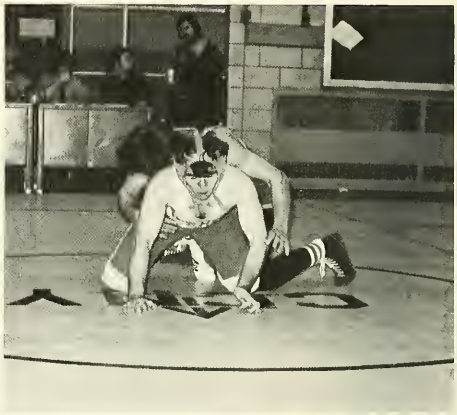
WRESTLING

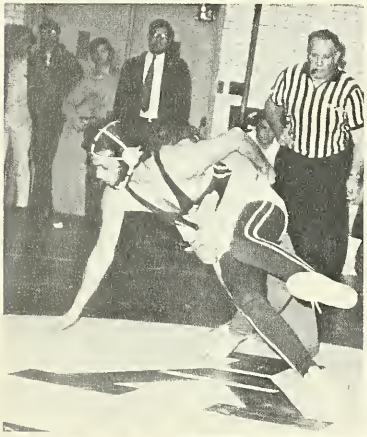


The fact that the Wrestling Team fared better was not due so much to skill as it was to guts and determination. As coach of the Wrestling Team, Neil Ellman has pounded his own brand of no-quit guts into each and every wrestler. Co-captains Lenny Press and Reuben Koolyk, consistantly demonstrated to their teammates what was expected of them, and the team quickly caught on. Soon, the Wrestling Team became the talk of the YU athletic scene, and scores of enthusiastic fans attended home matches to cheer their heroes on. The historic victory over the tough City College squad, was the product of Neil Ellman's coaching abilities, the individual wrestler's drive, and the crowds electrifying cheers of encouragement. The Wrestling Team was often able to put it all together, and finished the year with a respectable record of 7 wins and 5 losses.









But too much optimism for the future of the Wrestling Team would be fool-hardy. With the loss of seniors Lenny Press, Reuben Koolyk, Steve Edell, and Avi Terry, one has to wonder about next year, and the year after. The coaching is there, and so is the home gym. But with the physical education requirement of YU cut to the bear minimum of one year, it is doubtful that as many students as in earlier years will be willing to expend the time, effort, and determination, necessary to become successful wrestlers . . . Perhaps these doubts are unwarranted, perhaps not. As the cliche goes, only time will tell.

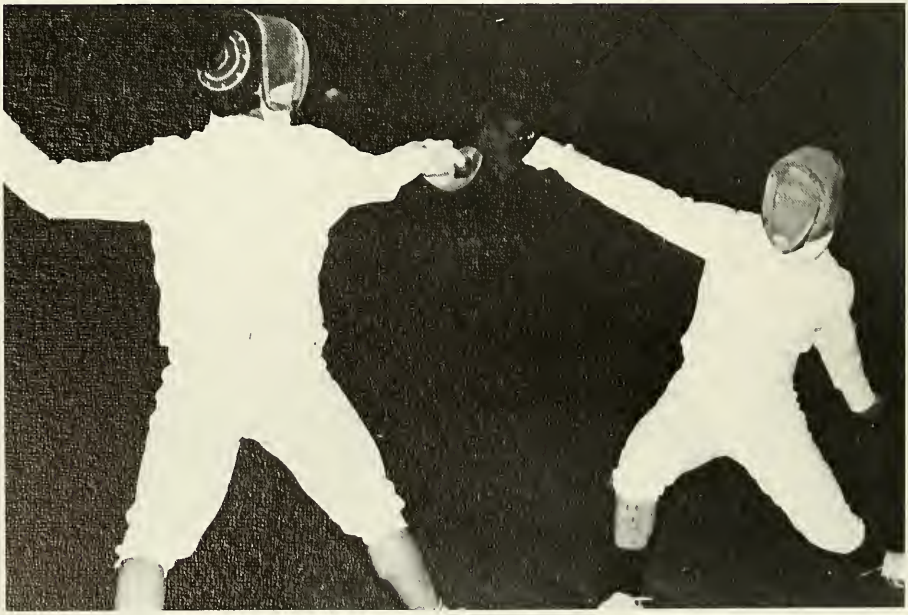
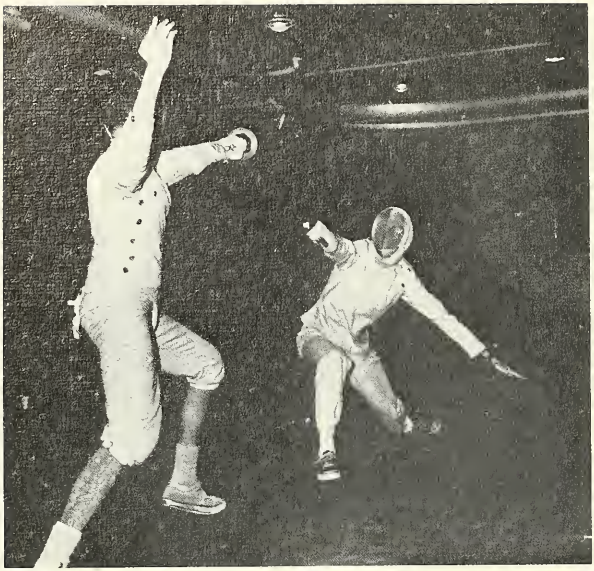
FENCING

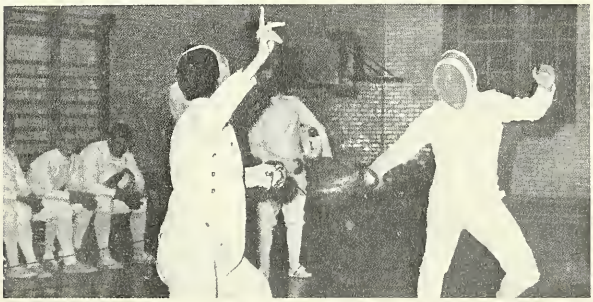


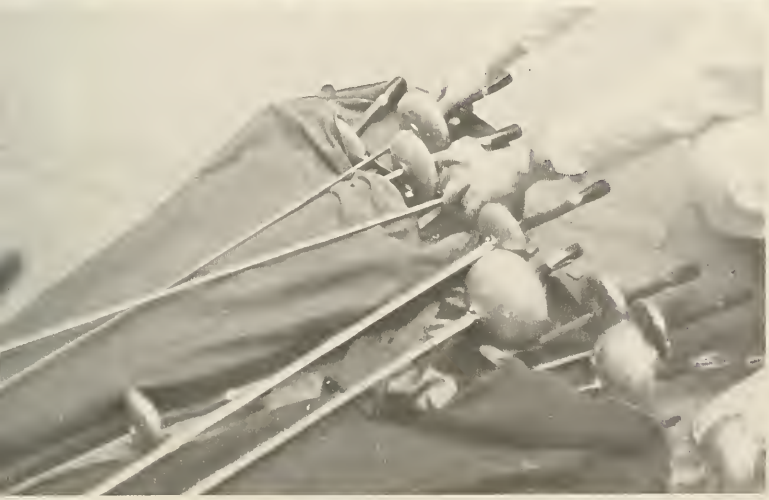
The many years of administration neglect has finally left its mark on YU's winningest team, the Fencing Team. This is best indicated by the sub-par 3-6 record collected by the team this year.

But this record is not indicative of what the team had to contend with. Added to the usual problems of poor and insufficient equipment, was the injury of Captain Joel Baum in the first bout of the first match of the year.

But even more important, Yeshiva had to compete against colleges that had recruited high school fencers on scholarship. Coaches Tauber and Marcel, both extremely qualified as coaches, are required to take freshmen who never even saw a foil, epee, or sabre, let alone know how to use one, and mold them into skillful fencers by the time they are Juniors.







Yeshiva fencers are good; some are even talented. The coaching is excellent, and the facilities are at least satisfactory. But unless YU begins to match recruitment strides with other colleges, one can only wonder when the Fencing Team will once again live up to its reputation as YU's winningest team.

This year, four of the team's steadfast starters, Joel Baum, Bob Benedek, Sid Rosman, and Neil Weintraub, graduated. Who will fill the slack, or whether it will be filled at all, is yet to be determined.

What is clear, is that the winning formula for the Fencing Team must be rediscovered quickly. Otherwise, the team will suffer a slow and agonizing death at the hands of mediocrity.

The class of '73 . . . It is a class of three 4.0's along with a huge supporting cast of summas. It is a class that boasts nine acceptances to various graduate programs at Harvard. It is a class that almost made the Dean's List Luncheon look like the Senior Dinner. It is a class, some say, that has captured intramural crowns by spending off-nights at Belfer computing the precise angles and arcs necessary for perfect bank-in shots.

But more than all this, the class of '73 is 242 individuals. 242 individuals who attend three different Jewish Studies Divisions and have 242 different views of how religion should or does affect their lives. 242 individuals who think different thoughts, laugh at different jokes, play different games, are intrigued by different phenomena and who plan different futures. 242 individuals who are destined to assume leading roles as rabbis, teachers, physicians, psychologists, lawyers, businessmen, accountants, physicits, biochemists and social workers; each one determined to make his own impression upon the sediment of society.

Some of us have matured and mellowed during our years at YU; others among us have regressed and been stunted. Some of us have grown hair long enough to classify us as hippie-freaks; others among us wear tzitzis that dangle out of our pants long enough to classify us as frummie-fanatics.

These 242 individuals managed to stay in YU long enough to achieve senior status. That is the clothing factor. That is the only factor which unifies us into one inextricable mass distinguishable from others just as each individual within the mass differs from the other.

But we have come to YU as individuals and we have departed as individuals. Outside of neophytic friendships that have yet to stand the test of time, there is no human bond that unites us as one.

Some may claim that the failure of the class of '73 to become 'one happy family' is a weakness in the structure of YU. I say, that unintentionally, it is YU's greatest strength. For there is no one way to live life, and there is no one way to love G-d. Man does not exist to be as indistinguishable as a drop of water in the ocean, rather he exists to be as singular as a raincloud in a blue sky. He must do what 'he' wants to do, believe what 'he' has come to trust.

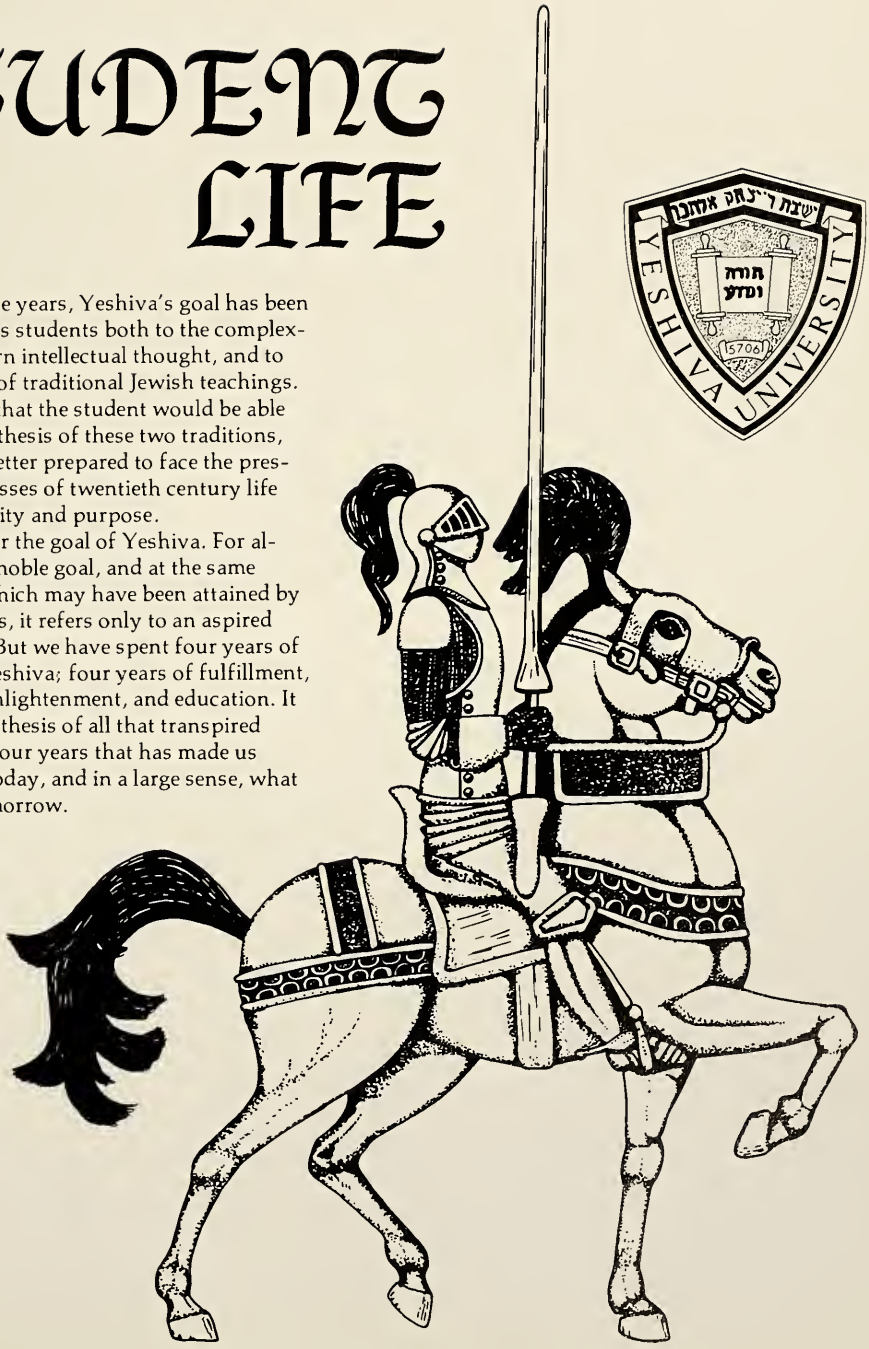
Conformity does not imply that one must surrender his individuality to society, that he must melt into the mass. Rather, it implies that one must add his 'own' contributions to the benefit of society. If there are those among us who have not found YU a unique educational experience, we all have at least learned the value of our own uniqueness.

Masmid '73 is a reflection of all that has contributed to make the YU experience for the individuals of the class of '73, lest we forget. For if we forget who we are and why we are so, then we have forgotton all there is to know.

STUDENT LIFE

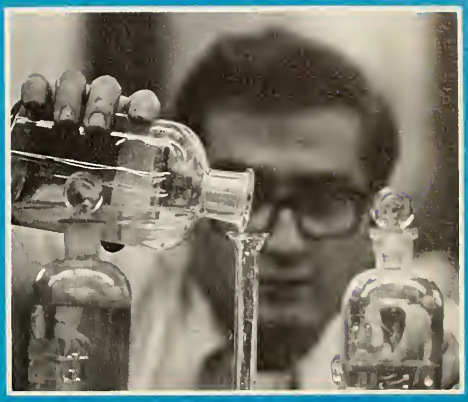
Through the years, Yeshiva's goal has been to introduce its students both to the complexities of Western intellectual thought, and to the subtleties of traditional Jewish teachings. It was hoped that the student would be able to forge a synthesis of these two traditions, and thus be better prepared to face the pressures and stresses of twentieth century life with equanimity and purpose.

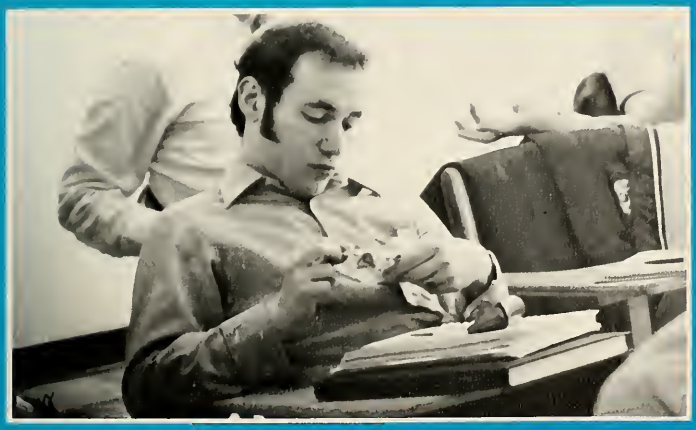
So much for the goal of Yeshiva. For although it is a noble goal, and at the same time, a goal which may have been attained by many students, it refers only to an aspired end product. But we have spent four years of our lives at Yeshiva; four years of fulfillment, frustration, enlightenment, and education. It is rather a synthesis of all that transpired during these four years that has made us what we are today, and in a large sense, what we will be tomorrow.

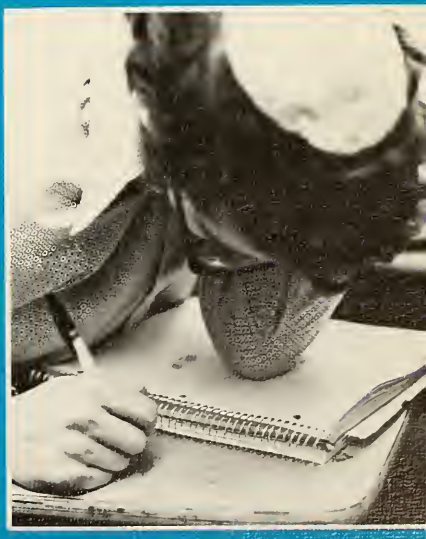


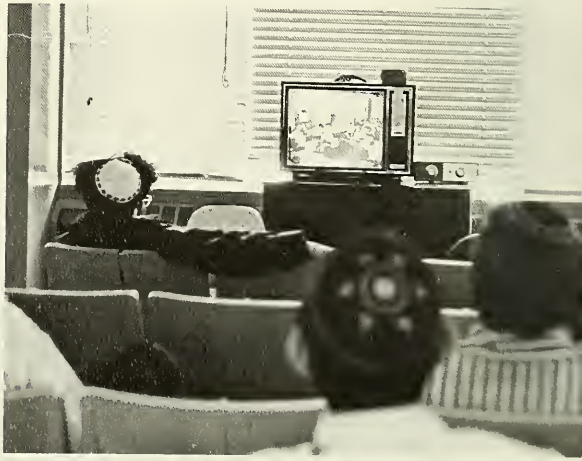
Some of us sought knowledge, others sought grades, and still others sought nothing. In this sense, Yeshiva has been to us just what we wanted to make of it. Knowledge was the priceless commodity offered to us; it was for us to accept it or reject it.

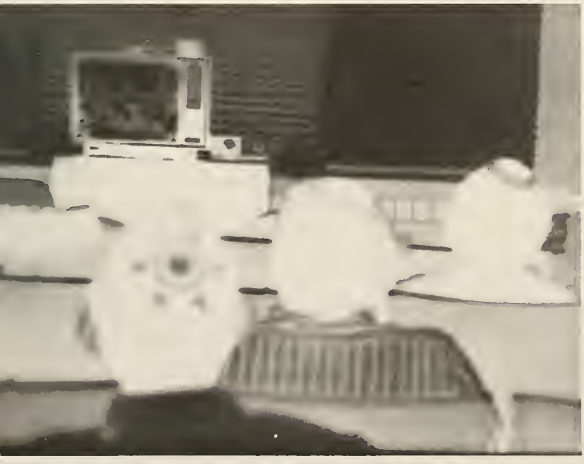
But in another sense, those who sought to grasp knowledge were often caught up in the controversy between the sometimes unyielding traditionalism of their Jewish Studies instructors and the liberal rationalism of their college professors. Here, synthesis desynthesized.











Seeking escape from the problems of synthesis, and seeking relief from a constant barrage of exams, students discovered satisfying modes of self-expression. Some students sharpened their cultural and esthetic tastes by participating in such activities as chess meets, concerts, and cultural exhibits. Others, dulled their minds by concentrating on physical activity, or by planting themselves, automaton-like, in front of the first available tv set.

In any case, it was soon discovered that one could hardly be expected to maintain his sanity in such a high-pressured mini-cosmos as YU, without finding, or if necessary, creating, satisfying diversions.

The many problems and pressures posed by college life, and particularly by college life at Yeshiva, also kindled within us the desire to know and to understand ourselves. But we found this Aristotalean ideal too difficult to attain simply by our own introspection.

And so,
seeking a greater understanding of ourselves . . .
we sought to understand others.

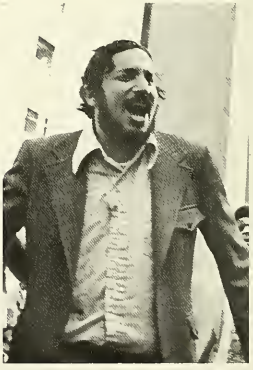
As the semesters slowly passed, we learned that our importance as individuals was sometimes best expressed by our involvement in the joys and sorrows, as well as the comfort and anguish of those, for whom we felt a special bond of unity. The key to our own individual importance, was togetherness.

And so, we celebrated together, and we demonstrated together.

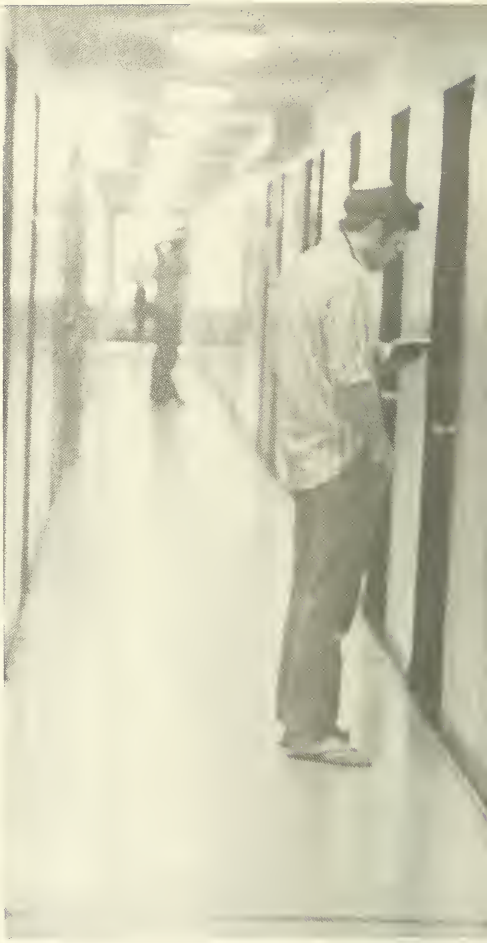


Our ties to Eretz Yisroel strengthened with each passing day. Many of us even spent a whole year of study in the Land of Milk and Honey.

Golda visited our campus, and brought us blessings from Eretz Yisroel, and an entire police department from New York City.

Israel Independence Day at Yeshiva University was a truly beautiful experience. All day long, we sang, danced, and prayed. The songs were songs of joy, the dances were dances of freedom, and the prayers were prayers for peace. And so, while discovering who we are as individuals, we were discovering who we are as a people.

Toward the end of our stay at Yeshiva, we suddenly realized that our diversions had actually become our main interests in life. Yet, sometime between our involvement in diversions and our search to know and understand ourselves, we managed to find the time to return to the nitty-gritty of college life, schoolwork; or to be more precise, tests, quizzes, essays, papers, and lab reports. Certainly, at Yeshiva, studying was a way of life, or perhaps more accurately, a necessity of life, for many students.



Finally, we saw "the light at the end of the tunnel." Stocked with a fresh supply of no-doz pills, and ground roast coffee without the grounds to wash them down, we braced ourselves for a last semester of extreme physical and mental exertion. Much of our little free time was divided between mutilating our grad school rejection letters beyond recognition, and having our acceptances framed. Then came the final final exams, accompanied by a final cathartic release of tension. Then, a long farewell dinner, and a short graduation, and it was all over.

All over . . .
except for the friendships we made,
the dreams we dreamed,
the individuality we sought,
the identity we found,
the knowledge we accumulated,
and the memories we have,
of four years spent at Yeshiva.

LATEST STYLE ELASTIC INSTEP LACE, $2.38.

AS ADVERTISED BY US IN THE NEWSPAPERS.

We formerly quoted the Julia Marlowe Lace Boot, with elastic instep, at $2.65, but the manufactrer refused to sell it to us longer unless we would charge our customers at least $3.00 for same. We refused to raise the price to our patrons, hence were compelled to build the shoe herewith illustrated. We have in this shoe combined all of the style usually found in the $4.00, $5.00 and $6.00 grades, and at the same time produced a shoe with elastic goring fitted to the instep in such a manner as to produce a perfectly elastic foot fitting boot. It far excels anything ever attempted in this style of shoe. The most perfect, self adjusting, elastic instep shoe made.

This boot will conform to the shape of the foot whether the instep be high or low.

MADE FROM THE VERY FINEST SELECTION OF VICI KID STOCK

Over our handsome Cincinnati last with plain stitched tip toe.

The style of heel foxing is the very latest and we fit the shoe with a medium concave heel. Nothing enters into the construction of this shoe but strictly high grade materials, including fast color eyelets, black satin inside top band, and to produce the most comfortable shoe possible, we have made it with a medium weight sole, sewn and very flexible. To those wishing a strictly high grade shoe, one combining style, fit and elastic instep, we recommend it.

THE PRICE is so much lower than all other elastic instep shoes, that there is positively no competition for this shoe, and please understand that there is no better shoe of its kind made at any price.

Sizes and half sizes, 2½ to 8.
Widths, C, D, E and EE.
Weight, averages 26 ounces.

מאת: עורך ניר

לאחר ארבע שנות למוד במכללה על שט אלישבע מיכאל או בכל מקום לימוד אחד, הרי בדור שהתלמיד עושה חשבון הנפש ועובר בדמיונו על ארבעת השנים שעברו עליו בחדרי הכתות השונות. הסוב והרע, שניהם עולים בד בבד, אך בדרך כלל כשאדם מנפה לשחזר תקופה בחייו הרי הוא נוסה לזכור את הטוב שבה, ויותר מכך – הרי ברע דשנו די והותר במשך שנות היותנו תלמידים במכללה וכעת, יתכן והגיע הזמן לציין גם את הטוב שמצאנו במקום זה.

האוניברסיטה בכללותה דוגלת בסיסמה "הורה ומדע". החורה מסמלת את הניצוץ הדוחני ואילו ה"מדע" מסמל את החומר. ואכן עם ישראל כגוף לאומי חייב להכיר בחשיבות שילובם של שני ניגודים אלו של החומר והרוח מכיון שאין עם היכול להתקיים בכות הנפש בלבד אלא זקוק לגוף הדומרי, לבשר ודם כדי לאככן בתוכו ולשמור על הנפש. ישיבה קולג' סיפקה לנו את החומר, את ה"מדע", ישיבה קולג' סיפקה לנו את המסגרת, את הגוף שבתוכו עלינו לשכן את הרוח, את ההורה שמצאנו במכללה על שט אלישבע מיכאל. החינוך היהודי הדתי שקבלנו כאן נבע מתוך הכרת הלאומיות של עם ישראל. לאום נחשב לכזה לא על ידי אמונתו בדת אחידה – וכהוכחה רואים אנו לאומים ועמים רבים אשר אמונתם ודתם שוה אך בכל זאת נחשבים הם לבני לאומים שונים. לאום הוא גוף אנשים אשר להם מולדת משותפה, היסטוריה, ספרות ולשון משותפים. ואכן אלו הם הנכסים אשר נתנו לנו כאן במכללה, נכסים שעזרו לנו להכיר את צביון לאום ישראל. בין שהיתה זו היסטורית עם ישראל, ספרות ישראל או פילוסופית ישראל. הרי הדברים שלמדנו כאן עזרו לנו להכיר מי אנו מה אנחנו ומהו מעמדנו בין אומות העולם, וכן עזרו לנו לגבש את צביוננו כבני לאום אחד.

OFFICE OF THE DEAN

Rabbi Jacob Rabinowitz
Dean, Erna Michael College

ידידי המסיימים,

"ואשמע את קול ה' אומר את מי אשלח ומי ילך לנו" (ישעי' ו)

הגאון מווילנא מעורר את השומת לבנו ומדגיש הדגשה יתירה את המלה "לנו", בלשון רבים כלומר - לאלקים ולישראל גם יחד. הוא הולך ומפרש שאדון העולם מחפש נביא שיוכל לתוך בין הבורא וברואיו. לא נביא כמו אליהו שתבע רק כבוד האב ולא כבוד הבן, ולא כמו יונה שתבע רק כבוד הבן, אלא נביא כמשה רבנו שמצד אחד הוא מתחנן לפני הקדוש ברוך הוא "למה יחרה אפך" ומאידך גיסא הוא כועס ומתרעם על עם ישראל וקורא: "חטאתם חטאה גדולה".

ואם בימי ישעי' כך בימינו על אחת כמה וכמה. הפער הנורא בין דתי ללא דתי, בין הדור הישן והדור החדש, מאפיל את עתידנו ומסכן ח"ו את עצם קיומנו.

נצלו את ההזדמנות בשתי ידים. למדו תורה לילדי ישראל, משכו את לבם ומותם למען עמנו ותורתנו.
